YOU'VE GOT ABSOLUTELY NO IDEA! WORKING WITH DIFFICULT GIRLS

A workshop for professionals working with young people

How do girls make sense of a world in which they must be all things to all people: glamorous and hard-working, assertive and caring, collaborative and single-minded? And how do we help girls when they can't talk about these things? When they get stuck, enacting their feelings at their own and at other people's expense?

This workshop will be a chance to share our learning and expertise. There will be some theory but a lot of the day will be practical: thinking about and practising ways of helping girls who are disappointed, hurt, angry, bitter, despairing, cut off from the world sometimes and, at other times, waging war against it.

The workshop will be of particular interest to professionals working with young people in education, health, social services or other professional contexts.

Workshop facilitator:

The workshop will be led by Nick Luxmoore. Nick is a trainer, school counsellor, teacher, youth worker and psychodrama psychotherapist (UKCP registered). He has 40 years' experience of working with young people and with the professionals who support them.

Nick's career has included teaching English and Drama in schools and prisons, teaching counselling at Oxford Brookes University, running a youth centre and youth theatre, setting up and managing a young people's counselling and information service, working as a school counsellor and as a counsellor with young refugees and asylum seekers. He currently works as a freelance trainer and supervisor.

He is the author of a number of books about working with young people, with themes including anger, self-esteem, death, love and hate.
